

We are a Proud PADS Puppy-raising Partner!

Why are there dogs visiting today?

This site supports the training of PADS assistance dogs for individuals with disabilities. Over the course of the year, PADS puppies-in-training and their volunteer puppy-raising families will have the opportunity to visit 14 community sites at no charge.

The goal is to:

- provide important community learning experiences for the puppies-in-training;
- say 'thank you' to the volunteer families that do this important work.

Thank you to our participating sites

To be updated

Dogs in museums, parks and heritage sites?

Once they have completed training and go into service with clients, assistance dogs legally have access to all of the same public spaces their human partners do. Puppies-in-training have government issued identification that provides them goodwill access to these same places. The best way to ensure great 'museum manners' is to provide puppies the opportunity to practice, right from the beginning of their training. If you have feedback about the program, please speak with someone at guest services.

We're working!

PADS families are used to answering questions about their puppies-in-training. Please remember that these dogs are 'at work' when they have their capes on. Please ask before approaching or touching a puppy.

We are a Proud PADS Puppy-raising Partner!

Why are there dogs visiting today?

This site supports the training of PADS assistance dogs for individuals with disabilities. Over the course of the year, PADS puppies-in-training and their volunteer puppy-raising families will have the opportunity to visit 14 community sites at no charge.

The goal is to:

- provide important community learning experiences for the puppies-in-training;
- say 'thank you' to the volunteer families that do this important work.

Thank you to our participating sites

To be updated

Dogs in museums, parks and heritage sites?

Once they have completed training and go into service with clients, assistance dogs legally have access to all of the same public spaces their human partners do. Puppies-in-training have government issued identification that provides them goodwill access to these same places. The best way to ensure great 'museum manners' is to provide puppies the opportunity to practice, right from the beginning of their training. If you have feedback about the program, please speak with someone at guest services.

We're working!

PADS families are used to answering questions about their puppies-in-training. Please remember that these dogs are 'at work' when they have their capes on. Please ask before approaching or touching a puppy.

About PADS

PADS raises and trains assistance dogs for people who are facing the challenges of life with a physical disability or who are deaf or hard-of-hearing. These dogs allow PADS clients to experience a greater level of independence and an enhanced quality of life.

For the first 18 months of their lives, PADS puppies live with volunteer puppy-raisers. A puppy-raiser is the first and very important step toward placing a working dog with a PADS applicant. In this time, socialization and exposure to a wide range of experiences prepare puppies to do their important work.

Field trips to community settings are a key component of this period of puppy development. New experiences, especially challenging ones in noisy or unpredictable environments are opportunities for puppies to build the confidence they need to move on to advanced training. For more information about PADS, visit www.pads.ca

About BC Field Trips

BC Field Trips is a four person volunteer group that exists to connect teachers and their students with community learning experiences. Through a website that allows teachers to search for field trips to match their teaching needs and an annual Field Trip Fair, we have helped BC teachers 'take learning on the road' since 2003.

BC Field Trips has used its connections to the community to facilitate these field trip experiences for PADS puppies-in-training and their volunteer puppy-raising families. For more information about BC Field Trips or how this program began, visit www.bcfieldtrips.ca

About PADS

PADS raises and trains assistance dogs for people who are facing the challenges of life with a physical disability or who are deaf or hard-of-hearing. These dogs allow PADS clients to experience a greater level of independence and an enhanced quality of life.

For the first 18 months of their lives, PADS puppies live with volunteer puppy-raisers. A puppy-raiser is the first and very important step toward placing a working dog with a PADS applicant. In this time, socialization and exposure to a wide range of experiences prepare puppies to do their important work.

Field trips to community settings are a key component of this period of puppy development. New experiences, especially challenging ones in noisy or unpredictable environments are opportunities for puppies to build the confidence they need to move on to advanced training. For more information about PADS, visit www.pads.ca

About BC Field Trips

BC Field Trips is a four person volunteer group that exists to connect teachers and their students with community learning experiences. Through a website that allows teachers to search for field trips to match their teaching needs and an annual Field Trip Fair, we have helped BC teachers 'take learning on the road' since 2003.

BC Field Trips has used its connections to the community to facilitate these field trip experiences for PADS puppies-in-training and their volunteer puppy-raising families. For more information about BC Field Trips or how this program began, visit www.bcfieldtrips.ca